Sites will execute a series of engineering design challenges in 3rd – 8th grades, enabling students to develop solutions to real world science and engineering problems faced by NASA scientists, engineers and astronauts today. Students will use an engineering design process (EDP) to develop solutions to problems based upon NASA real world research. Through the process students connect with scientists and engineers to refine ideas. Final student products explaining solutions and associated data will be submitted to NASA and the US Department of Education (ED) for review. These will be reviewed by NASA Scientists and Engineers, and ED leadership. Finally each state will host recognition events to recognize all teams.
